China, Indonesia, Vietnam lead global growth for coming decade in new Growth Lab projections

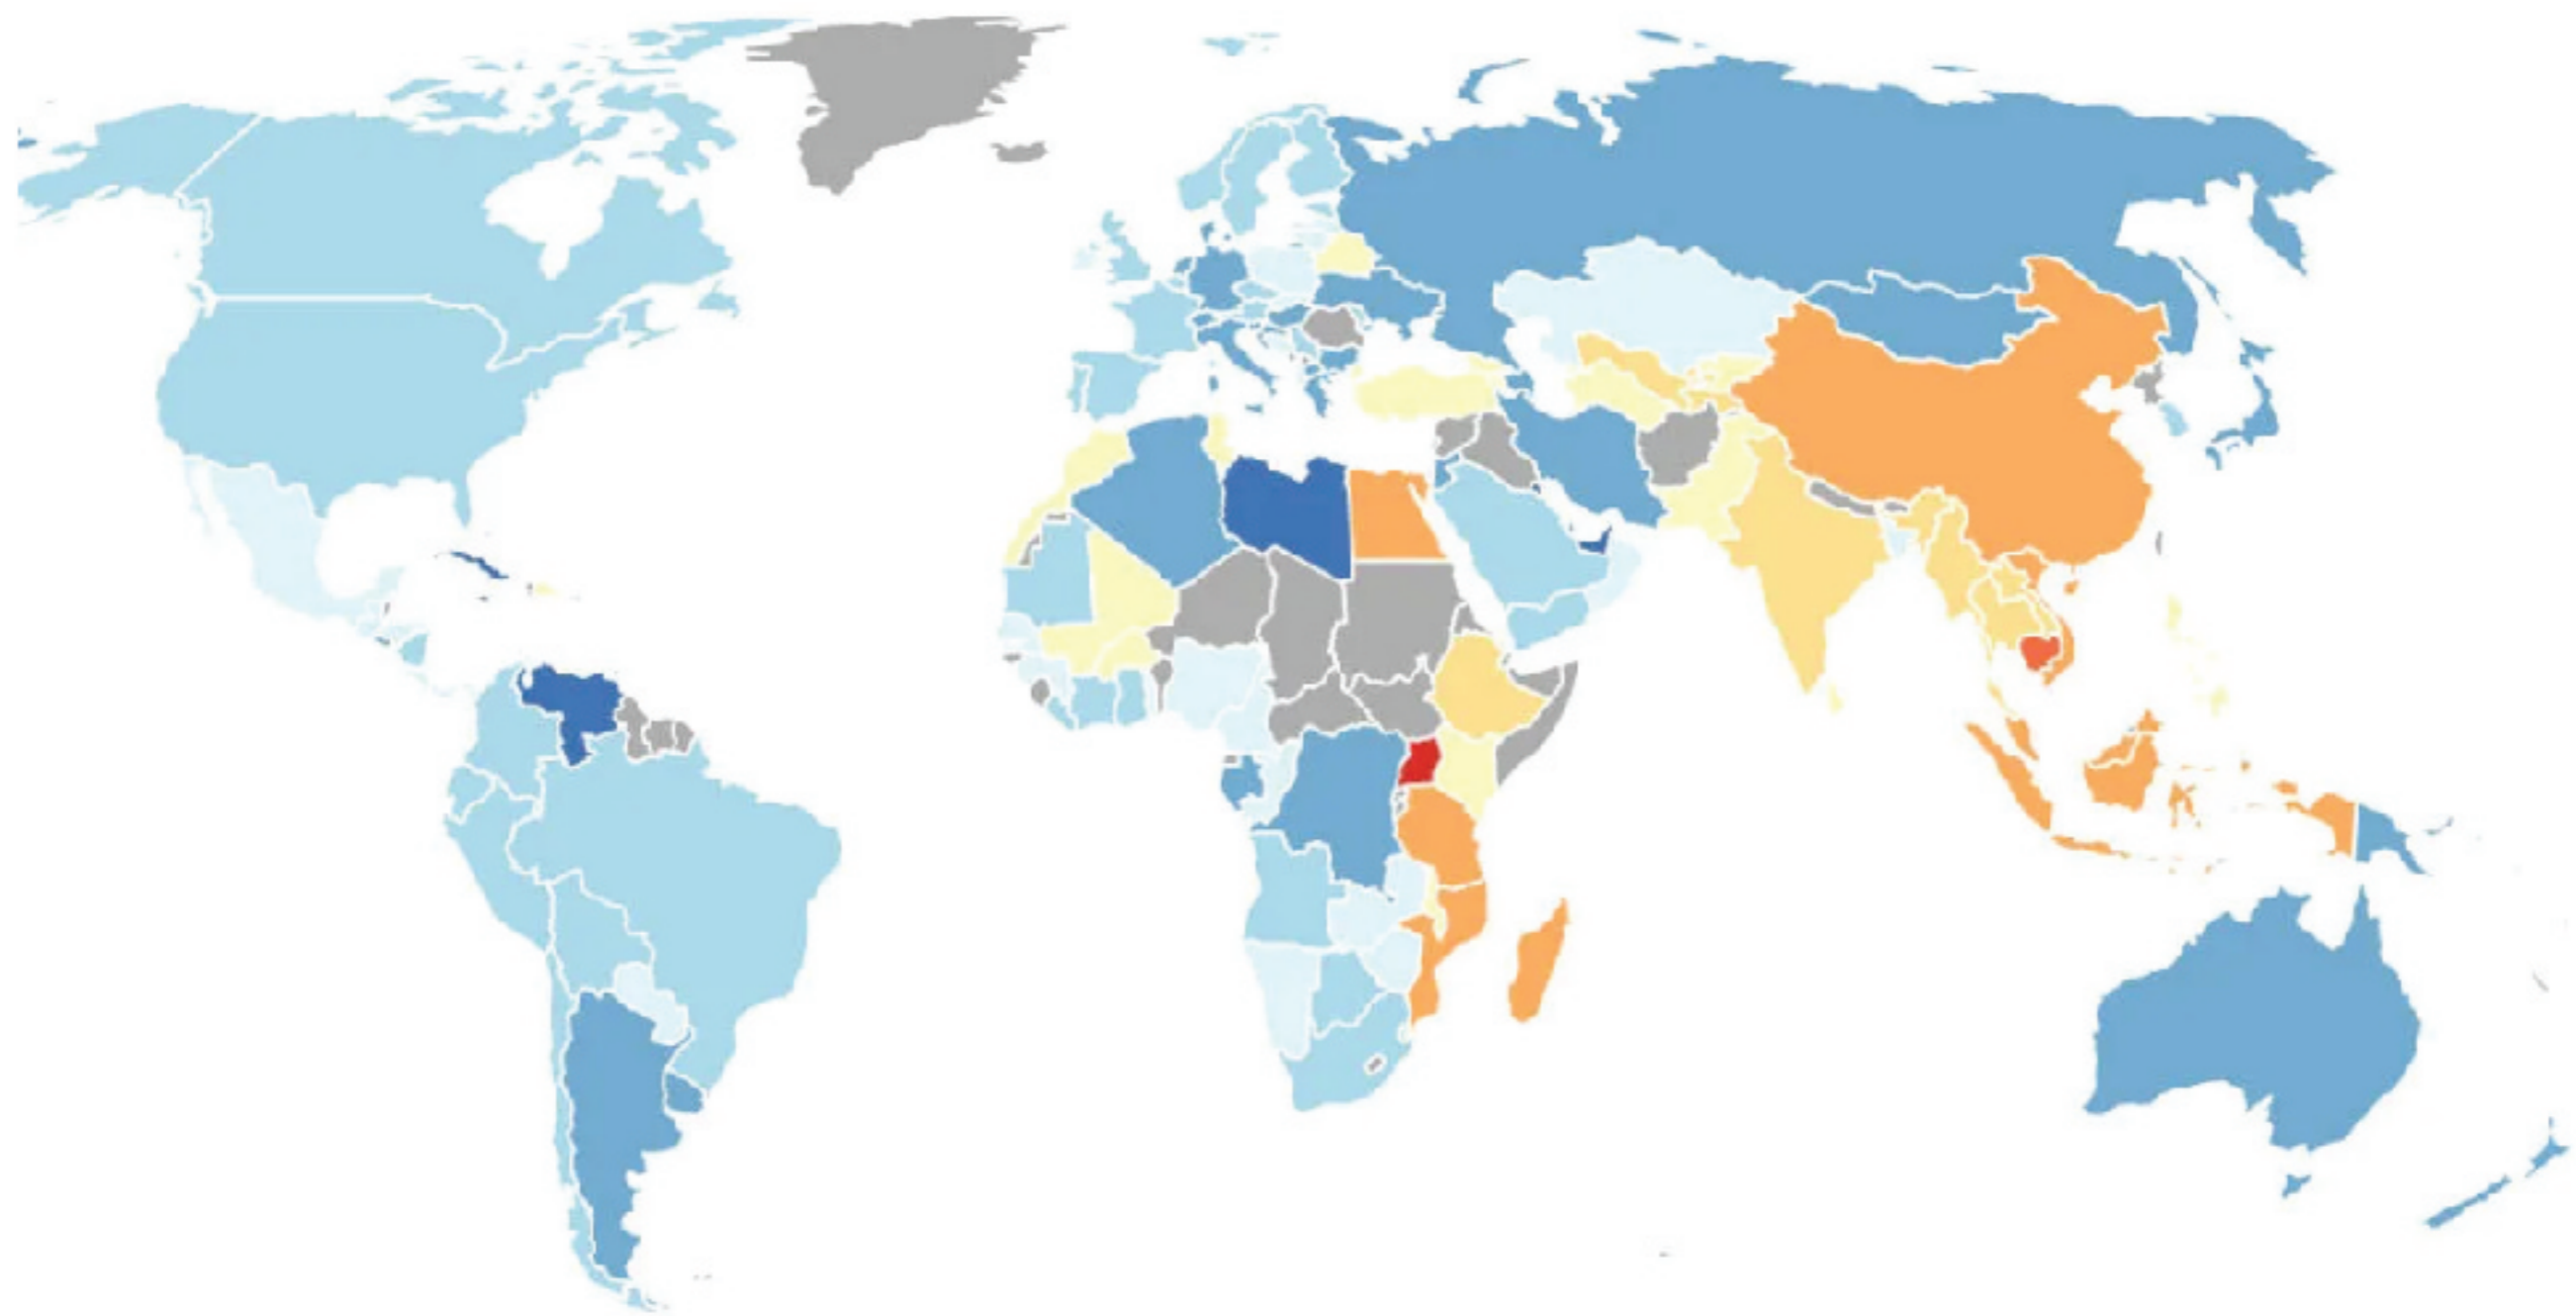

Cambridge, MA – China, India, Indonesia, Uganda, and Vietnam are projected to be among the fastest-growing economies for the coming decade, according to researchers at the Growth Lab at Harvard University. The new growth projections presented in The Atlas of Economic Complexity include the first detailed look at 2021 trade data, which reveal continued disruptions from the uneven economic recovery to the global pandemic. China is expected to be the fastest-growing economy per capita, although its growth rate is smaller than gains seen over the past decade.

Growth over the coming decade is projected to take off in three growth poles, East Asia, Eastern Europe, and East Africa. Several Asian economies already hold the necessary economic complexity to drive the fastest growth over the coming decade to 2031, led by China, Cambodia, Vietnam, Indonesia, Malaysia, and India. In East Africa, several economies are expected to experience rapid growth, though driven more by population growth than gains in economic complexity, which include Uganda, Tanzania, and Mozambique.

Eastern Europe holds strong growth potential for its continued advances in economic complexity, with Georgia, Lithuania, Belarus, Armenia, Latvia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Romania, and Albania all ranking in the projected top 15 economies on a per capita basis. Outside these growth poles, the projections also show potential for Egypt to achieve more rapid growth. Other developing regions face more challenging growth prospects by making fewer gains in their economic complexity, including Latin America and the Caribbean and West Africa.

“Countries that have diversified their production into more complex sectors, like Vietnam and China, are those that will lead global growth in the coming decade,” said Ricardo Hausmann, director of the Growth Lab, professor at the Harvard Kennedy School (HKS), and the leading researcher of The Atlas of Economic Complexity. “China and Vietnam already realized many of the income gains from their increased complexity. Nevertheless, they remain more complex than expected for their income level so will remain global growth poles.”

(马萨诸塞3日综合电) 哈佛大学增长实验室(Growth Lab)的一项研究预测显示，未来10年间，中国、越南、印尼、马来西亚、印度、乌干达和等国将是增长最快的经济体。历经全球新冠疫情的冲击后，全球经济复苏并不均衡。据《哈佛校报》报道，尽管中国增长率低于过去10年的增幅，但预料将成为人均成长最快的经济体。未来10年的增长，可望从东亚、东欧和东非这3个“增长极”(growth poles)起飞。而到2031年，几个亚洲经济体已具备必要的经济复杂性，来驱动最快速的增长。

其中带头的有中国、柬埔寨、越南、印尼、马来西亚和印度。增长实验室主任、哈佛经济学家豪斯曼说：“未来十年中，那些已将生产多元化至更复杂产业的 国家，另外在东非，如乌干

达、坦尚尼亚和莫桑比克等经济体可望体验快速的成长，不过人口成长的驱动力大于经济复杂性的增长。至于东欧，则是由于经济复杂性持续成长，而有强劲的增长潜力，就人均基础来说，排名前15的经济体预计有格鲁吉亚、立陶宛、白俄罗斯、亚美尼亚、拉脱维亚、波斯尼亚和黑塞哥维那、罗马尼亚和阿尔巴尼亚等。

经济复杂度指数 (ECI) 是每个国家出口中所蕴含的生产能力的多样性和复杂性。研究者们将一个社会所拥有的生产知识或技能多样性视为经济发展过程的核心。经济增长需要积累新的知识，并将其用于将生产多样化，转向更为复杂的活动。ECI能够有效解释不同国家之间的收入差异，并预测未来的增长趋势。
